Intense feelings washed over women around the world as they watched Hillary Clinton give her concession speech earlier this week. Many felt grief, others felt frustration and disappointment, but a very select few felt a specific kind of curiosity: what lipstick is she wearing?

Though it may be a little short-sighted to focus on Hillary's looks, many beauty-lovers seek to emulate their heroines by copying their makeup choices. Refinery29 reports that Secretary Clinton's makeup artist used Votré Vu Champs Elipsee Lip Crayon in Spark ($24), a midtone rose.

Considering there was a beautiful hidden meaning in the purple color of Hillary's lapels, we wouldn't be surprised if the name of this lip color was symbolic, too. After all, what has likely kept this powerful woman going in the face of adversity throughout her entire life is a spark – of hope, of determination, or of idealism. If using the same lipstick as Hillary can inspire us to accomplish even the smallest positive change in our communities, then sign us up. She may not have won the election, but we know that she's not done changing the world.
